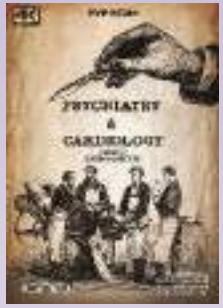
From brutal lobotomies to precision surgery, medicine has walked a long and often terrifying path. This gripping series uncovers the shocking treatments of the past and the breakthroughs they inspired. Across multiple fields, cutting-edge science now transforms lives once deemed hopeless. From Handsaw to Scalpel reveals how far we’ve come and where the future of healing is heading.

PSYCHIATRY AND CARDIOLOGY

1x56'



Watch the video

This episode takes us through the rich history of psychiatry, from demonic possessions to madhouses, including lobotomies and drug experiments. In the operating room, we witness electroconvulsive therapy treatments, formerly known as "shock therapy." Then we shift our focus to the heart and the history of cardiology, showing viewers how we discovered that the heart and electricity go hand-in-hand, and also where the famous symbolism of the heart comes from. In the operating room, our cameras give viewers a behind-the-scenes view of a delicate procedure on a patient suffering from atrial fibrillation.

TRANSPLANT AND PLASTIC SURGERY

1x56'

Watch the video

This episode introduces us to the world of transplants, from the doctors of yesteryear and their dubious attempt at transplants (including grafting chimpanzee testicles onto in a quest for virility) to those of our future, who will render the notion of rejection obsolete… In the operating room, we witness a life-changing kidney transplant for one patient. This episode also examines plastic surgery, exploring prosthetics glued with plant sap, facial reconstructions for war injuries, and the story of a very particular Italian graft. In the operating room, we witness surgery restoring the function of the membranes that protect eyeballs.

UROLOGY AND PULMONOLOGY

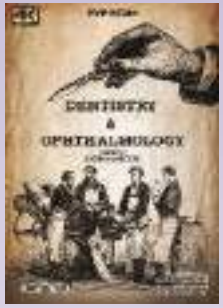
1x56'

Watch the video

This episode takes us through the experiments that have enabled us to provide modern-day treatments for incontinence, urinary infections, and genital malformations. In the operating room, a patient undergoes an artificial urinary sphincter implant that will completely change his life. This episode also explores pulmonology, touching on the damage caused by tuberculosis and medical advancements that will soon allow for lung tissue regeneration. In the operating room, a patient has a potentially cancerous nodule removed.

DENTISTRY AND OPHTHALMOLOGY

1x56’



Perfectly straight, cavity-free, pearly whites … or crooked, stained yellow and even maybe missing a few, teeth have been bothering humans for centuries! From treatments that might have been questionable to technologies of the future, this episode reveals the fascinating field of dentistry. We then explore one of the most important organs in the human body: the eyes. As 50% of us will be affected by some varying degree of optical issue at some point in our lives, we discover the history of ophthalmology from the earliest Egyptian medical techniques to the electronic chips of the future.

Watch the video

OBSTETRICS AND ONCOLOGY

1x56’

Potions, fumigations, rustic obstetric chairs and tools that look more like instruments of torture than anything else… This episode explores the field of obstetrics of the past, present and future. We also discover the surprising history of the field of oncology: from middle-age remedies such as wolf’s tongue, to the tragic fate of Marie Curie and the devotion and dedication of the first doctors to use radiotherapy. We also explore contemporary treatments and possible future solutions to fight the ruthless disease.

Watch the video

NEUROLOGY AND ORTHOPAEDICS

1x56’

During this episode, we explore the history of neurology to discover the link between demonic possession and epilepsy, early brain mapping, the modern treatment of a patient with Parkinson’s disease, as well as what the future holds in the neurology field. We then explore the history of orthopaedics, when fabric, leather wood and animal bones were used to replace limbs and treat war wounds, and examines the orthopedic treatments of today and tomorrow.

Watch the video

HEMATOLOGY

1x28’

This episode reveals hematology as a science both vital and fascinating, centered on our most precious fluid: blood.
From the age of bloodletting to the era of CAR-T cells and bone marrow transplants, we trace the rise of a field undergoing a revolution.
Through the moving journey of a leukemia patient, we witness cutting-edge technology, the challenges of genetic compatibility, and the hope carried by ongoing research.
Blending ancient myths, religious beliefs, and scientific breakthroughs, the episode highlights the central role of blood in our history, our health, and the future of medicine.

Watch the video

GASTROENTEROLOGY

1x28’

This episode ventures into the intricate world of the digestive system and gastroenterology, a once-marginalized field now at the heart of modern medicine.
From the bizarre case of a fur trapper turned human experiment, to microbiota self-transplants, to the first gastroscopes tested on sword swallowers, we follow the evolution of a vital specialty.
Patient testimonies, surgical procedures, video capsules, and even fecal transplants shed light on diseases, treatments, and the innovations shaping the future.

Watch the video

TRAUMATOLOGY

1x28’

From prehistoric amputations to tomorrow’s ambulance drones, this episode explores the high-stakes world of traumatology, where every second counts.
Through the story of a motorcyclist gravely injured in a crash, we discover the vital role of emergency physicians, surgeons, and medical teams in treating polytrauma patients.
The episode retraces the evolution of emergency care, from the Roman Empire to modern trauma centers, and unveils spectacular innovations in artificial intelligence, triage, and rehabilitation.

Watch the video

DERMATOLOGY

1x28’

Watch the video

This episode dives into the fascinating world of dermatology, a medical specialty often underestimated, yet guardian of our body’s largest organ: the skin.
From Emperor Augustus’s eczema to futuristic treatments using artificial intelligence and nanotechnology, the story traces the history of skin conditions, their social stigmas, and the scientific breakthroughs to treat them.
Through the stories of patients living with vitiligo, actinic keratosis, or skin cancer, we discover the crucial role of the dermatologist, the true detective of the epidermis.

INFECTIOUS DISEASES AND MICROBIOLOGY

1x28’

Watch the video

From ancient plagues to modern pandemics, this episode explores infectious disease and microbiology, the frontline science in the battle against killer microbes.
Through the harrowing case of a patient struck by flesh-eating bacteria, we uncover the crucial role of infectious disease specialists, the invisible detectives of medicine.
The story navigates historic outbreaks, scientific progress, and looming threats such as the dreaded “Disease X.”
From the discovery of penicillin to nanorobots and CRISPR, the episode showcases the weapons science is developing to fight pathogens.

STIs

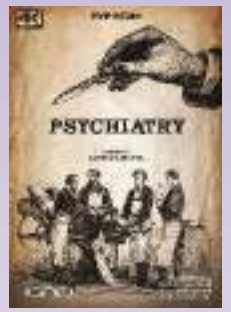
1x28’

Watch the video

This episode delves into the taboo and complex world of sexually transmitted and blood-borne infections (STIs).
From the syphilis that struck down kings, to the revolution of the HPV vaccine, to the relentless fight against HIV, the episode explores the medical, historical, and social dimensions of these diseases.
Through patient stories, recent scientific breakthroughs, and alarming statistics, we see how STIs reflect our relationship with sexuality, shame, and prevention.

PSYCHIATRY

1x29'

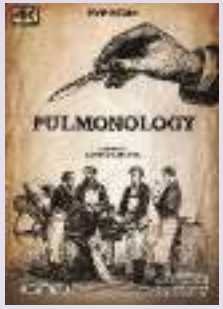


Watch the video

Anxiety disorders, bipolar disorder, attention deficit, post-traumatic stress, depression, schizophrenia — one billion individuals on the planet are currently living with a mental health problem. Over the centuries, various experiments have been attempted to alleviate the lives of those affected. This episode takes us through the rich history of psychiatry, from demonic possessions to madhouses, including lobotomies and drug experiments. In the operating room, we witness electroconvulsive therapy treatments, formerly known as "shock therapy."

PULMONOLOGY

1x29'



Watch the video

One billion people around the world are currently suffering from pulmonary diseases. The lungs were long considered disgusting due to their appearance, and there have been many attempts at treating lung problems throughout history, including fumigations and syrups made from heroin, morphine, chloroform and opium. Thankfully, medicine has come a long way since. This episode takes us through the history of pulmonology, touching on the damage caused by tuberculosis, and leads us into the future of the discipline, thanks to advancements that will soon allow for lung tissue regeneration. In the operating room, a patient has a potentially cancerous nodule removed.

PLASTIC SURGERY

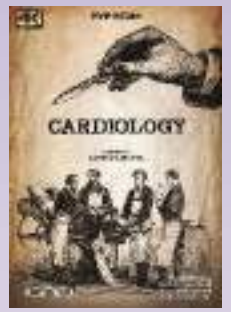
1x29'

Watch the video

Close to 3,000 years ago, an Indian surgeon was reconstructing the noses of patients who had had their noses cut off as a punishment for adultery. This episode takes us through the rich history of plastic surgery and leads us to explore prosthetics glued using plant sap, facial reconstructions for war injuries, and the story of a very particular Italian graft. Our exploration into plastic surgery continues into the future as processes continue to evolve and what once seemed far-fetched, such as lab-made organs, prosthetics and human tissues become a possibility. The future is the era of augmented humans. In the operating room, we witness surgery restoring the function of the membranes that protect eyeballs.

CARDIOLOGY

1x29'

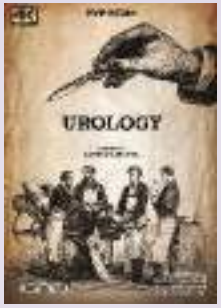


The heart is arguably the most important organ in the human body, keeping us alive. Unfortunately, many people's hearts are in poor condition. Cardiovascular diseases are the number one cause of death worldwide, causing the deaths of close to 18 million each year. This episode takes us through the history of cardiology, showing viewers how we discovered that the heart and electricity go hand-in-hand, and also where the famous symbolism of the heart comes from. In the operating room, our cameras give viewers a behind-the-scenes view of a delicate procedure on a patient suffering from atrial fibrillation.

Watch the video

UROLOGY

1x29'



Urinary problems are nothing new. In fact, urinary system medicine has been around for at least 6,000 years. Today, it is estimated that 16% of men and 33% of women over the age of 40 suffer from incontinence, but very few dare to bring it up with their doctor. This episode takes us through the experiments that have enabled us to provide modern-day treatments for incontinence, urinary infections, and genital malformations. It also leads us towards the future of urology, where we will soon be able to predict prostate cancer through urine tests and eliminate erectile dysfunction by modifying genes. In the operating room, a patient undergoes an artificial urinary sphincter implant that will completely change his life.

Watch the video

TRANSPLANTS

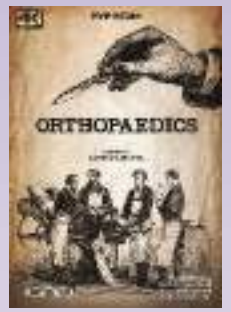
1x29'

Humans have been performing transplants for over 3,000 years, since long before operating rooms or anaesthesia existed. Today, around 150,000 complete organs are transplanted each year worldwide. This episode introduces us to the world of transplants, from the doctors of yesteryear and their dubious attempts at transplants (including grafting chimpanzee testicles onto men in a quest for virility) to those of our future, who will render the notion of rejection obsolete… In the operating room, we witness a life-changing kidney transplant for one patient.

Watch the video

ORTHOPAEDICS

1x29'



Watch the video

Robotic arms that react to the smallest muscular movement, 3D-printed bones that can be perfectly inserted into the body, titanium legs strong enough for running marathons… The modern world of orthopaedics never ceases to amaze, but our ancestors could never have dreamed of beating the 100-metre record when they had their leg amputated! This episode explores the history of orthopaedics, when fabric, leather, wood and animal bones were used to support backs, treat war wounds, and even to replace ligaments and limbs. We then dive into the modern-day field to examine contemporary treatments and see what the future of orthopaedics may entail.

OPHTHALMOLOGY

1x29'

Watch the video

They say eyes are a mirror to the soul… We say they are one of the most important organs in the human body. In fact, people the world over ranked losing their eyesight as their second worse fear, just below death. And yet 50% of us will be affected by some varying degree of optical issue at some point in our lives. In this episode, we explore the history of ophthalmology from the earliest Egyptian medical techniques to the electronic chips of the future.

OBSTETRICS

1x29'

Watch the video

Is there anything more natural than the act of birth? It's an essential part of life, right? And yet deliveries have been resulting in death, medical issues and complications since time began. Potions, fumigations, rustic obstetric chairs and tools that look more like instruments of torture than anything else… The field of obstetrics has certainly (thankfully) evolved over time, and that's without mentioning the work of midwives who have long mixed medicine, magic and cultural beliefs for the good of mother and child. This episode explores the field of obstetrics of the past, present and future.

ONCOLOGY

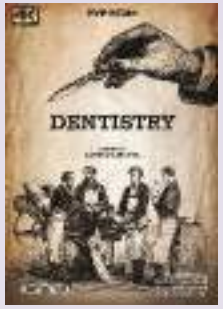
1x29'

Watch the video

The statistics are scary: by today's estimates, close to one in two will have cancer in their lifetime and one in four will die from it. Yet, cancer is nothing new and people have been trying to treat it for centuries. In this episode, we explore the surprising history of the field of oncology: from middle-age remedies such as wolf's tongue, to the tragic fate of Marie Curie and the devotion and dedication of the first doctors to use radiotherapy. We also explore contemporary treatments and possible future solutions to fight the ruthless disease.

DENTISTRY

1x29'

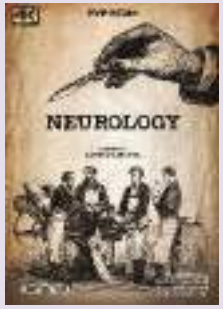


Watch the video

Perfectly straight, cavity-free, pearly whites … or crooked, stained yellow and even maybe missing a few, teeth have been bothering humans for centuries! Over the years dentistry has become a medical field in itself. Treatments might have been questionable to begin with—and certainly painful—but there has been one common thread since the dawn of dentistry, and that is advancement. Dentures, prostheses, fillings, extractions, dental devices, crowns, implants, bleaching and more, this episode explores the past, present and future of the fascinating field of dentistry.

NEUROLOGY

1x29'



Watch the video

At a time when outlandish beliefs, religious fervour, and a lack of understanding of the human body can be a dangerous mix, suffering from Parkinson's, epilepsy or any other neurological condition with hard-to-conceal symptoms can worry and even scare people. During this episode, we explore the history of neurology to discover the link between demonic possession and epilepsy, early brain mapping, the modern treatment of a patient with Parkinson's disease, as well as what the future holds in the neurology field.

During the Neolithic period, how did the birth of agriculture and livestock cultivation bring about a revolution in our ancestors’ diet? Why, at first, did this abrupt change endanger the health of mankind? How would this new diet also have major consequences on the anatomical, genetic and cognitive evolution of humans? What role did the birth of culinary culture, of knowledge in the preparation and preservation of dishes, play in this process? So many questions that remain to be explored **...

In Science in Motion, we meet the researchers who are struggling with the biggest challenges facing humanity.
How do we make AI and humans thrive side by side? How do we conquer infection and dementia? How do we develop new antibiotics and clean energy? How do we save our forests and arctic regions on a hotter earth? Researchers on the verge of major breakthroughs lay out the road towards a better world. Always in motion. Always with science.

THE NEW FOREST

1x24' - 2020

The forest has always been important to our society. But the world is changing - and so is the forest. In future we will need a new kind of forest. Deep in the Scandinavian forests we will meet the scientists who are looking for new ways for the forest to develop. New fertilizers, stronger root systems and genetically modified trees. But also smarter wood products as transparent wood. But the scientists also need to solve the challenges of the future. How will the trees respond to climate change? And how will we make sure that artificially made forests will have an equal biodiversity to natural forests?

THE FIGHT AGAINST INFECTION

1x25' - 2019

You live under a constant threat of intruders. You can't see them - because they are extremely small. They are the microorganisms that fill the air you breathe and the water you drink. Bacteria, viruses and parasites. And these intruders have developed many successful methods for deceiving your defenses. But scientists are now making ground breaking discoveries that can help to defend our bodies. With the latest DNA technology, the most advanced microscopes and the fastest supercomputers, researchers are determined to stop the microorganisms causing influenza, tuberculosis and meningitis.

MAPPING THE ARTIC CLIMATE CHANGE

1x20' - 2019

Climate change is one of the greatest challenges mankind has ever faced. One thing is for sure - that world of tomorrow, will look different from today. But what is really happening right now, and how will climate change affect our earth in the future? We meet the scientists who are mapping climate change. They travel to the North Pole, South Africa and northern Scandinavia in search for answers.As the earth warms up, the North and South Pole warms up even faster. The future for our climate is critical. To know what to do, we need to know what is happening.

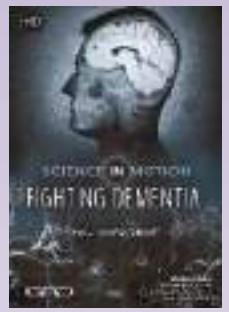
Fighting dementia

1x25' - 2018



Your brain is a miracle.100 billion nerve cells control everything that happens in your body. But your brain is also susceptible to diseases that can kill these nerve cells - neurodegenerative diseases like dementia. We live in a time when science has helped us conquer many diseases and our modern way of life enables us to live longer. But none of this matters when it comes to dementia - our bodies can be sustained - but our brains are not. Today, more elderly people die of dementia than cancer. So, what can we do to stop this? What can science come up with so that we can be one hundred years old, and still be healthy in both body and mind? Meet the researchers that are hard at work, to help your brains future.

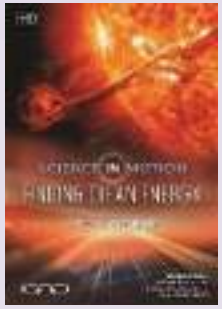
Finding clean energy

1x23' - 2018



All life on earth is dependent on energy. The sun, our energy source, has been warming our world from the very beginning. Plants, animals and humans depend on this life-giving light and heat. But then, something happened. Man discovered other sources of energy – coal, oil, gas and atomic power. But our insatiable hunger for energy has thrown our environment of balance, a disruption that now threatens life on earth.We need to find new, cleaner energy sources. Here we meet the scientists who want to solve our planet's great challenge. Their research is about specially designed molecules, completely unique nanomaterials, re-creating photosynthesis and new smart solar cells. The obvious first choice in the hunt for energy is to look to our original source - the sun itself.

The threat against antibiotics

1x20' - 2018

We've become accustomed to a life in which healthcare saves us. Much of this is thanks to one single kind of drug - antibiotics. Now, that has changed. You have probably heard of antibiotic resistance – that antibiotics no longer work on the constantly mutating strains of bacteria. This is why bacteria is, once again, threatening our way of life. Although the situation can look pretty dim, new solutions are under way. Here we meet the researchers who are developing new smart ways to defeat the bad bacteria.

How did France become the country of gastronomy?

During the 1900’s, thousands of motorists took to the roads of France for the first time. And in particular on the Nationale 7 which links Paris to the French Riviera. At each stop, restaurants and inns opened to serve this new clientele. Thus were born true dynasties of cooks who would make France THE country of food.

A big vegetable garden at the foot of the Eiffel tower, a nature zone where once there were train tracks, a primary forest and a savannah in Vincennes and in Boulogne’s woods architecture and plants blend perfectly. Paris reveals its surprising green areas. This path of discovery is full of surprises. Who would have thought it possible to grow lettuce on rooftops in Paris’s chic neighborhoods? Yet this is one of the harvests from the garden of a prestige hotel next to the Eiffel Tower.

Winds of over 300 kmh. On March 13 2015, Cyclone Pam ripped through Vanuatu with devastating power. This distant archipelago in the South Pacific is in the minds of the entire world. However, for Science, Vanuatu is the focal point of our concerns. Earthquakes, volcanic - eruptions, coastal erosion, global warming, this Eden made of coral and ash is a veritable laboratory of environmental upheaval and natural disaster.

The damage caused by invasive species in New Caledonia is now reaching dramatic proportions: deer, ants and cats are wreaking havoc with its biodiversity. Even when tiny, like the little fire ant, they are able not only to destroy specimens that are unique in the world but also bring turmoil to human lives. Scientists even believe that these clandestine varieties are responsible for the sixth extinction crisis.

For many of us French Polynesia can be summed up in one picture postcard island: Tahiti, with its beaches of white sand, a lagoon, fabulous underwater world and an easy way of life. And yet, all over this vast maritime country, daily life for most people is no Robinson Crusoe idyll. From the Marquesas to Tuamotu, by way of the Society archipelago, we discover the interior life of Polynesia, far from the beaten tracks of the tourists.

A human adventure in some of the world's most isolated places.

In this captivating series, we follow the letter carriers who, beyond their simple function, become the true links of these remote communities. Through their journeys, discover poignant stories and moving encounters that remind us of the importance of human contact, far from the immediacy of the connected world. A quest for meaning, authenticity and sharing.

COLOMBIA

Watch the video

Colombia, a vast and diverse country, is home to regions of rugged beauty, but often extremely difficult access. This documentary explores the logistical and human challenges of sending parcels to one of the most remote corners of this country, right in the middle of the Amazon rainforest. Plane, truck and boat, non-existent roads and capricious rivers, the journey promises to be incredible! Along the way, we'll become privileged witnesses to the stories and daily challenges of these communities. We'll take part in their celebrations, in their daily lives, in their sacred places.

NORWAY

Watch the video

Norway, with its impressive fjords and wilderness areas, offers landscapes of unspoilt beauty, difficult to access but of rare serenity.

The delivery of a mysterious parcel plunges us into the daily lives of the inhabitants of Lofoten, at an essential time of the year: the "skrei" cod fishery. On this journey from Oslo, follow the characters as they brave extreme winter conditions to reach these isolated islands and discover a unique way of life.

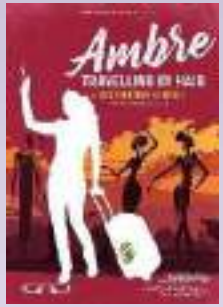
What a pleasure to travel and to better understand the world... by cutting hair!

A young woman travels the world with only a pair of scissors and a comb. She sets up in a street, on a beach or in a village square and offers to cut hair to those who need it. Her kindness, her open-mindedness, her humor and her know-how allow her to gain people’s trust. Thus begins her adventure which will take her from meeting to meeting, from story to story, until the confines of the lands she explores...

KENYA



Watch the video

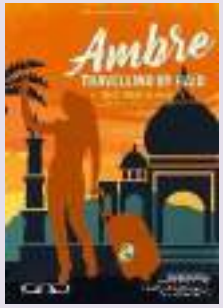
Ambre sets off to discover hair traditions. Equipped with her briefcase and always ready to unfold her traveling salon. From the capital, Nairobi, to the wig salons, passing through Africa's largest shantytown in the company of traditional hairdressers before reaching the remote lands of the Masai, with their astonishing rituals. The journey ends in Turkana, in the very north of Kenya, where ancestral rituals are cultivated. An adventure rich in encounters and learning, where hair traditions and trends remain unique.

SOUTH KOREA

Watch the video

Fascinated by Korean culture and its unique approach to beauty, Ambre wanted to learn more about local hairdressing practices. In South Korea, hairstyling is much more than just a question of aesthetics. It is often associated with a person's identity, personality and social status. From k-pop culture among young people in Seoul to ultra-modern salons at the cutting edge of technology, she will also discover the demands of young

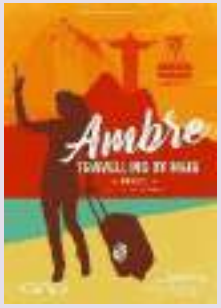
INDIA



Watch the video

Ambre travels to India, where women's hair is considered the most beautiful in the world. So much so that it's the subject of a thriving business. Our globetrotting hairdresser realizes that hair is a powerful symbol of religious affiliation and status within society. India is also the birthplace of the term "shampoo". From Bombay to New Delhi, via Varanasi and Chennai, she will come across different communities and religions: Hindus, Sikhs, but also surprising beliefs such as hair donation. Ayurvedic plants will hold no secrets for her, nor the new hair techniques passed on to her by the hairdressers of Bollywood superstars.

BRAZIL



Watch the video

Ambre, a young hairdresser, travels to Brazil to offer her services on the street. By interfering in the life of the local hairdressing salons, she sympathizes with her customers of fortunes to share slices of life. Through her eyes and her job, let's discover a country rich in diversity and in constant societal evolution!

Our heroes are physicians, emergency doctors, farmers and, above all, pilots. They carry on their professions in one of these territories at the ends of the earth. We discover these regions that are so difficult to access, that only the airplane can reveal, through the daily work of those whose are living an adventure, in close proximity to nature.

FLYING ON THE EDGE OF ICE (ALASKA)

Melissa Burns has chosen the great hostile and untamed spaces of Alaska to indulge her passions for extremes. This young mother of two is an aerobatic champion and dances in the air like no other between the mountains.She amazes everyone who crosses her path and has made it her goal to inspire other young women to follow her example.

GUARDIAN OF THE AMAZON
(BRAZIL)

Watch the video

Formerly employed by illegal loggers or illegal gold miners, Fernando Bezerra has decided to give up everything to take part in the fight for the preservation of the lung of the planet: the Amazon. The missions of this Brazilian pilot are as varied as they are vital: monitoring deforestation, protecting indigenous communities, emergency medical evacuations and, more recently, participating in the fight against the Covid-19 pandemic …

THE FOREST PLANTER
(MEXICO)

Watch the video

In Mexico there is an ancestral and devastating pastoral tradition… the burn.The peasants set fire to their fields to clean them in order to sow the next crops, often these fires escalate and spread to the wooded hills. Faced with this tragedy, José Camacho affectionately nicknamed El capitán, had this simple idea: to use his small plane to reforest the devastated lands and accelerate the natural process of reforestation …

FLIGHT OVER PARADISE
(KENYA, CANADA, BOLIVIA, MADAGASCAR)

Watch the video

On our planet, there are places that people cannot easily reach, inaccessible spots where nature reigns supreme... places where the environment is vast and awesome, where the sense freedom is deep. In these wild decors that harken back to the dawn of our world, the plane is very often the only means of moving about. Its role is vital: it allows the inhabitants of these villages at the ends of the world to feel less isolated. In Kenya, Bolivia, Canada and Madagascar, local pilots take us up in their planes to discover exceptional sites that are still preserved and untouched...

PACIFIC: ADVENTURERS OF THE SKY
(VANUATU, NEW ZEALAND, PAPUA)

Watch the video

There are places on our planet where roads stop, where trains cannot run, where boats cannot dock. Welcome to the Vanuatu Archipelago, the mountains of southern New Zealand or the most remote areas of Papua New Guinea. Air travel is often the only means of transportation. Its role is crucial: it allows residents to feel less isolated. Flying in these territories at the end of the world involves risks.

AMAZON TAXI (SURINAM)

Watch the video

Alessandro Huber works for a small transport company that flies over Suriname. In this country covered with 96% virgin forest, as soon as we move away from the maritime coast, we fly over what some call, the “Green Hell”. Seen from the sky, it’s a gigantic emerald-colored rug. On the ground, it is an impassable primary forest with regions that are completely inaccessible by car or boat. Without his plane, it would take many days to connect the communities together.

THE PILOT OF THE ATOLLS (POLYNESIA)

Watch the video

Maheanuu Mourin is a pilot of the only Polynesian airline. On board its ATR, a turboprop aircraft capable of carrying up to 68 passengers, this 40-year-old Tahitian serves the most isolated islands of this region as big as Europe. He is the link between the communities. Without his plane, the daily life of the inhabitants of the atolls would be much more complicated.

25.07.28

MARK PALM, THE SAMARITAN IN THE SKY (PAPUA/NEW GUINEA)

Watch the video

For 9 years, Mark Palm has been helping residents of the Sepik River villages, one of the most remote areas of Papua New Guinea, free of charge. Snake bites, crocodile attacks, malaria crisis’s, difficult childbirths, the life of this 44-year-old Californian is a succession of adventures. Onboard his seaplane plane, he transports the wounded, brings medicine, and organizes vaccination campaigns for the 200 000 Papuans who live along the river, often in difficult conditions.

THE FLYING MAASAI (KENYA)

Watch the video

At the helm of his small single-engine aircraft, Ian Lemaiyan, a Kenyan biologist and bush pilot, flies over the savannah to protect the rhinos. From reserve to reserve, the Maasai pilot introduces us to a series of unique wildlife preservation programs. Seen from the sky, Kenya’s open spaces appear now as they were once known to those who once came here on safari.

00.00.00

THE BUSH PILOT (AUSTRALIA)

Clark Butson founded an airline in the heart of Australia's arid desert. Its goal: to unite the isolated communities of the province of Pilbara, in the west of the country. Here, the airplane is the only link with the rest of the world. And Clark has a lot to do to on his missions. Rescues, student transportation, supplies, rotations between mines, visiting aboriginal communities.

THE FLYING FARMER OF THE PACIFIC (NEW ZEALAND)

Deep in the New Zealand Alps, Guy and Fiona Redfern are the flying farmers at the end of the world. Plane and helicopter are essential in raising the 5,000 sheep, 2,000 cows and dozens of horses on this farm, the most isolated in the country. In addition to being a tool for their work, their plane is also a means of escaping their isolation to meet friends and perform some aerial stunts.

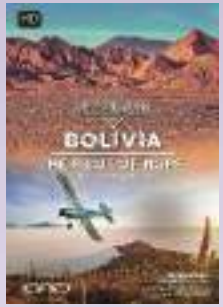
THE PILOT OF HOPE (BOLIVIA)



Watch the video

Ivo Daniel Velasquez is an anonymous hero. At the controls of his plane - sometimes a tiny Cessna, sometimes a twin-engine Piper - he defies the quite extraordinary flying conditions of Bolivia to come to the assistance of the most remote communities in the country. Whenever, Ivo lands his plane on the most unlikely airstrips, from the Andes and the Altiplano to Amazonia, for these communities he represents a vital link with the rest of the world.

DOCTOR MARK TO THE RESCUE (VANUATU)

Watch the video

Lying to the north of the Vanuatu archipelago in the South Pacific, the Banks Islands are literally cut off from the world. Whenever there's a medical emergency, the 9,000 inhabitants of the Banks have only Doctor Mark Turbull and his orange cuckoo to rely on. The sole doctor for hundreds of miles around, he is the only one who can land on the unlikely and dangerous airstrips of these tiny volcanic islands.

100, 400, 500, 1000 dollars for a complete outfit and sometimes a lot more… women the world over no longer hesitate at spending a small fortune on bras and panties. Lingerie is one of the rare sectors that is not suffering from the crisis. They’re innovating with new textiles, shapes are changing and trends are increasingly naughty. How did lingerie become the mirror of a society and does it reveal the evolution of women on different continents? An investigation beneath the lingerie…

Massage with chocolate or spices, anti-stress cure, balneotherapy, grape seed modeling… the well-being and Spa market is booming. For the millions who now frequent these establishments, whether in France, or Bali or New York, the quest is the same: take care of yourself, give yourself a magical break, a few moments of happiness. Considered an extravagance only a few years ago, the Spa is now an obvious choice.

In autumn, Iceland changes its colours: after weeks of permanent quasi-daylight the vegetation bursts out everywhere. Carpeted with moss and lichens, the lava flow on the flanks of the capricious volcanoes turns to fluorescent green. The same applies to the white of the glaciers and the deep blue of the fjords in the northwest. Seen from the sky, the panorama is breath-taking!

To tour France by following her coastline -and in the air, too- is the guarantee of a wonderful voyage in three dimensions and between three worlds: the sea, the countryside and the city.

Naturally, we fly above the 3,427 kilometres of coast. However, each film will have the same structure to satisfy the spirit of a "collection". 26 city ports have been selected as staging posts along the journey. So, in addition to the sea and the countryside we will have cities.

THE SILVER DRAGON
Rendez-vous avec le dragon
This is one of nature's most unusual features: an inland wave far from the sea or the ocean. A wave that comes up the river against the current. A wave that the inhabitants of Qiantang have both feared and admired for 2,000 years. The Silver Dragon – or Chinese tidal bore – is not a wave that is easily tamed or understood. The phenomenon arises from the meeting of the incoming tide and the river's outgoing current. The wave invades the estuary and comes up the river, filling it with a swirling wave. It has long brought destruction. With terrible power, the wave breaks dams and spreads turbid salt water into the fields. Famines have been frequent. The very votive population has begged its forgiveness, offered sacrifices, or shot arrows in its direction.

THE ICE-MAD ON THE SAINT-LAWRENCE
Les Givrés du Saint-Laurent
The St Lawrence River is one of the most dangerous maritime routes to navigate on the planet. During the winter months, the Canadian Coast Guard icebreaker plows endlessly up and down between the Atlantic and Montreal to clear a passage for cargo ships. For three months we followed the daily lives of the crews of the Amundsen, one of Canada's biggest icebreakers. The task of its crew is to free cargo ships trapped in the ice. However, the St Lawrence is not just a vital artery for the economy of Quebec, it also provides a formidable, open freedom for those who live along its banks. So our crew ventured onto the ice field together with some of those who are wild about the river. Rémi and his friends are experts at white fishing, an ancestral Amerindian technique consisting of tracking the fish under the ice. Every winter they set up a large, temporary village on the ice in the Saguenay fjord.

MAKOKO: THE BLACK VENICE
Makoko, la Venise noire
With its wooden houses on piles, channels with hundreds of pirogues reaching each part of the village and going from house to house, and tree-trunks by the thousand floating nearby, Makoko is an incredible village on piles. 60,000 people are thought to live in this suburb of Lagos. Fishermen mostly, coming from Ganvié (another pile-dwelling village, in Benin) or from the inland villages of Nigeria. The inhabitants work on Lagos harbour, run little shops, sell water and gas, or work for the wood traders. From the sky, it looks like a huge village crossed by hundreds of channels. Houses are sometimes isolated, sometimes reached by wooden foot bridges.

LA ISLA DE LA NATIVIDAD

It's a story of a small Mexican fishing community in a hostile area which has now become a model for the conservation of its maritime anvironment and resources. Today, around three hundred people live there. They are totally self sufficient. After having over-exploited its environment, the community has adopted a policy of strict conservation, going well beyond that imposed by governmental authorities. They have even created their own marine reserves. They have introduced a draconian surveillance operation to ensure that no one can loot them. This is their story…

COACHES AND SWIMMERS

Maitres et nageurs

Aphelile has been able to swim since the age of 12. He lives some dozen miles from the centre of Cape Town near the Monwabisibeach that adjoins the last remaining "sharks" of Khayelistha, the most deprived shanty towns in the giant agglomeration. This is where Aphelile lives. He is one of the rare breed of top-level, Black South African swimmers. An exception in a community that is barely familiar with the sea. In Cape Town, Monwabisi is the beach for the Black population. It's a dangerous beach where every year the currents and the waves cause a string of drownings. A beach made all the more dangerous because most of those who go there cannot swim. For several years now, a swimming club at Monwabisi has been trying to knock the old ideas on the head: no, drowning is not a matter of fate; yes, Blacks can also learn to swim. This is Aphelile's mission.

THE FORCED LABOURERS OF THE LAGOON

Les forçats de la lagune

In the middle of the night they dive and dive again into the murky waters of Lagos lagoon. Equipped only with simple buckets, most of the time naked, they scratch at the bottom ten feet below to scrape up the sand before the sun becomes unbearable. Slowly their pot-bellied ships are filled, one free dive after another, and then they hoist the sails and head back to the village. These forced labourers of the lagoon might be right out of deepest antiquity, with no other power than their muscles and the wind. Thousands of dives to provide the capital’s construction sites with its raw material. Harrowing work, but with a timeless beauty. At dawn, as the Nigerian capital is awakening, sailing boats with sumptuous patchwork sails glide softly to their home port. The men are exhausted. The images are resplendent. Then they must off-load the sand, basket by basket. The boats are built on the beach, the sails sewn in back yards out of rice sacks and the trucks gnaw at the mountains of sand erected by the men. And yet, the whole sand economy is run by women, in this violent country, which long ago granted them equality. Pauline is the owner of a boat, and of a crew. She runs her little business like an astute businesswoman. Without voyeurism, sharing the lives of the workers, Thalassa spent several days aboard these boats in the company of the sand divers. A report on one of the many faces of people at work and an incredible human adventure.

Milos, les bienfaits du volcan
Milos is unique amongst the Greek islands. A tiny patch of earth of 160 km2 with extraordinary mineral wealth. Because Milos is a volcano, a sleeping volcano to be sure, but with just enough wreathes of smoke in its crater to remind the island's 5,000 inhabitants of its presence. As one eruption followed another (the last dates back 80,000 years) it formed the rocks to provide a veritable treasure store that men have been exploiting for thousands of years. This volcanic activity has also created exceptional and bewitching landscapes and a large part of the islanders today live from this "fire from the earth". And some others in a more unusual fashion.

LOFOTEN ISLANDS: FOR THE LOVE OF COD

Aux Lofoten, la morue est reine

Nestled at the world's end, in northern Norway, the Lofoten islands offer a surprising scenery. Peaking at over 1000 meters above sea level, the picturesque mountains are surrounded by turquoise waters. Situated above the Arctic Circle, the islands nevertheless enjoy mild temperatures thanks to the warm air brought in by the Gulf Stream, which protects the seven-island archipelago from extreme weather conditions. Thanks to this exceptional climate, life in Lofoten is surprisingly frantic in the middle of winter. Every year, between January and April, the world's largest reserve of cod migrate to the tiny archipelago to spawn en masse. A miraculous fishing follows, feeding the region since the 10th century! Once dried, the fish is referred to as 'salted cod', before making its way to the Portuguese, Spanish and Italian markets.

It's the oldest gathering of airships in the world. A true challenge! Irish weather is not reputed for favoring aerial sports. However, the important thing for Joe is to commemorate the 1100th anniversary of Waterford, the oldest city in Ireland, founded by the Vikings. And to offer the citizens of the County an unforgettable spectacle. Because of their friendship for Joe, twenty-eight pilots, from all background, answered the call, without knowing if they would even be able to take off.

SAPEURS
Sapeurs
The ‘sape’ phenomenon was born during central Africa’s rush to independence. It was the Congo that first saw the appearance of men adopting Western fashions, but adding a highly personal touch, especially where colour is concerned. Today sape is a veritable life-style that has spread far beyond the frontiers of the Congo. In Cameroon we set out on the trail of these devotees, rich and poor, who are willing to make huge sacrifices to invest in clothes. They open their wardrobes and share their little sapeur secrets with us. Because you don’t just play at being a sapeur – you are born a sapeur.

SIGNAL IN DISTRESS
Signal en détresse
It’s the building they love to hate in Soulac-sur-mer. The building on the sea front called the Signal is the subject of much debate. First, its architect is not to everyone’s taste. And now the building and its resident find themselves in a very worrying situation. Erosion threatens. Every day the waves nibble away the dune at the foot of the building. Every day the residents wait to be protected. Confronted by the ocean and the critics, the Signal and its residents are feeling increasingly isolated.

BAIA
Baia, l’ardente de l’empire romain
Pompeii, Vesuvius… two sites so evocative of the archaeology and volcanism of the Naples region. So who spares a thought for Baia and the Flegrean Fields? And yet, at the time it was the supreme resort for the emperors and aristocracy of Rome, a totally other world on the other side of the bay which represented every vice cited in ancient texts.Today Baia is a sunken city, swallowed up by a very rare and particular form of volcanic action: bradyseism.

CAMPING UP NORTH
Un camping au Nord
As holiday makers plunge into the traffic jams and head for the sun, we decide to test holidays in the north. So we set down our bags (and our prejudices) in the most northerly campsite in France, at Bray-Dunes, on the Belgian border, set on the sands of a beach that is characteristic of the region. There, we share the everyday lives of Chantal and Françis, regulars for over thirty years, and José, the camp’s Jack-of-all-Trades, and also its living memory. Meeting them, our prejudices soon disappear…

WHERE HAVE ALL THE VAHINAS GONE ?

Où sont passées les Vahines?

An investigation into the myth embedded in our minds: that of the vahine, the Polynesian island woman, of rare and savage beauty, whom the early explorers described in their journals page after page. We go to meet those who perpetuate this wonderful story, but also those who believe the myth is just a traveler's fantasy.

THE SKELETONS OF QUEMENES

Les squelettes de Quemenes

On March 10 2008 a ferocious storm is unleashed upon Brittany. Off the coast of Finistere, in the Molene archipelago, the tiny island of Quemenes is battered by giant waves. It was on this tiny island that a young couple had arrived to give new life to an abandoned farm by turning it into holiday accommodation. That day, when David is taking a solitary stroll along the beach, he discovers four skeletons in a state of perfect preservation. From that moment an enthralling investigation is launched… into a realm somewhere between fantasy, myth and reality.

THE SAILS OF ST. TROPEZ

Les voiles de St. Tropez

At the end of every summer, the famous village with the coloured bell tower holds a race that is unique in the world. The "Sails" is the largest gathering of sailing boats in the world. Three hundred boats sail the Bay of St Tropez to win the most prized trophy of the season, the final regatta before winter, the Holy Grail for classic yachting crews. This year we invite you to experience the race as you've never lived it before, aboard two emblematic yachts of the 30s, both from the drawing board of the famous Scottish designer, William Fife: Tuiga of the Monaco Yacht Club and Mariska with its Swiss crew. These two monuments of sail are the ultimate sporting boats and their identical dimensions make them close competitors. Aboard are the finest sailors of the day, constantly working their cathedrals of sail with one single objective: to cross the finishing line first.

MESSAGE IN A BOTTLE

Messageries Maritimes

SOS, love letters, expressions of friendship… Stuart commits to the sea the emotional outpourings of those who, unlike himself, are not fortunate enough to live on the Channel. Thisseaside English postman receives hundreds of e-mails from all over the world that he prints, puts into a bottle and tosses into the sea. Maybe one day his bottles will fetch up on the beaches of the North Sea, which Wim has been relentlessly scouring for 30 years. This solitary pensioner has found nearly 800 messages in bottles brought to him by the simple chance of the tides. We go to meet two men passionate about maritime messaging: anchors aweigh!

YELLE

Yelle

Saint-Brieuc has its star. She is young, fresh, smart and friendly. She electrifies theatres and dance floors on all continents. She’s better known around the world than she is in France. Her name? Julie Budet, aka Yelle… Hip globetrotter, but with roots deep in Saint-Brieuc. A girl almost like any other. And it runs in the family: her father wrote and composed one of the most famous of Breton sea shanties.
